Whether you're heading to New Orleans for Mardi Gras or just hitting it up for some of the legendary "lessez les bon temps rouler," your choice of hotel could make or break the excursion. You don't want to be in the maelstrom of Bourbon Street mayhem, nor do you want to be too far away from all the best places on your Big Easy bucket list. Which makes The Pelham Hotel well worth considering.

Smack in the middle of the convenient Central Business District yet a stone's throw from the French Quarter, the historic, boutique property just underwent an approximately $3 million renovation helmed by design led by Suomi Design Works, covering its public spaces and 65 rooms and suites, so there's never been a better time to check in and check it out.

“This renovation will provide guests with an elevated yet distinctly New Orleans experience,” notes Allison Barnette, The Pelham’s General Manager. “Inspired by the property’s origins, we sought to preserve the hotel’s unique character while transforming spaces with the modern-day traveler in mind. From the moment they arrive, guests will be immersed in the rich history of the city while receiving the world-class hospitality that The Pelham is known for.”
